Hello Michael,

I read both of your and Thang's message regarding our family's situation. I support your decision for putting the house for sale. I also agree with Thang regarding our obligation to help Ba out consistently. In regards to other family member, help should only be there when they are in desperate need. With Quang and his family, they will need all the help to "get started." But he and his wife should start thinking about the suggestions you put forth (ie. getting and education, getting a second/third job).

These difficulties should be a good lesson for our future generations (our nieces and nephews). They should be aware of the problems in the family and strive to prevent further problems through education. I, myself, is "done" with my studies and hardship of residency and is just getting started in my career. I have accrued a 6-digit school loan debt and is working hard to make ends meet. Our nieces and nephews must realize that life is tough and that everyone has "problems" to differing degrees. But, one must keep focus and strive through education and hard work to make a better life for themselves.

:) Ryan
